

Whiskey Not Legal Tender in Laundry

A 17 year old bomber plant worker went into the Hing Lee Chinese laundry on Pearl St. Saturday, stood a quart of whiskey up on the counter and invited the proprietor, Wing Lee, to partake of the cheering fluid in payment of the worker's accrued laundry bill. The proprietor declined and suggested a cash payment.

The worker, who police said had been partaking of his own refreshments with some apparent excess, fumbled in his pocket, produced a dollar bill and asked change for $10. The proprietor pointed out that the money offered was only a dollar, whereupon the customer created a disturbance, among other things knocking a large electric fan from the counter and damaging it considerably. Chinese workers barred the exit and called police who charged the customer with intoxication and disorderly conduct.

Church Sells Old